Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Examiner has fully considered applicant's amendments and remarks. Applicant's remarks with regard to examiner's interpretation of claim 9 are correct, however, this does not alter the basic result of the previous amendment to claim 1 (and now claim 9). In light of the current amendments both independent claims would now be drawn to the same invention if entered. However, as previously noted, this invention is not the originally elected invention.

With regard to claim 9, the phrase "manner of payment," was not used or defined in the specification, though it is clearly intended by applicant to have a specific meaning. This has led to a lack of clarity and has in turn resulted in confusion. Arguing in favor of one specific meaning after the fact when the phrase is not described (or even used) in the specification is not helpful. The examiner now however appreciates that the phrase could be interpreted as argued by the applicant. Rather than a new matter objection, this would therefore result in an objection to the specification for failing to provide proper antecedent basis for the claimed subject matter. See 37 CFR 1.75(d)(1) and MPEP § 608.01(o).

With regard to both claims 1 and 9, the invention originally arranged payments through the intermediary. The previous version of claim 9 still would have allowed this interpretation regardless of "manner of payment." The previous amendment of claim 1 and the current amendment of claim 9 (if entered) result in the payment going to the organizer rather than the intermediary. Applicant is blurring the distinction between the two and the organizer may have some control over the intermediary, however, if they are not distinct elements then a fundamental aspect of the invention is lost. It is examiner's understanding that the second price is the total amount including both the first price and the additional benefit to the organizer, yet both independent claims now pay the full second price to the organizer rather than the intermediary. Claim 9: "upon payment of the second price by the consumers other than the organizer to the organizer..."

Claim 1: "providing the organizer with funds from each gift giver equal to the second price...". Claim 9 further generates a benefit equal to the difference between the first and second price, while paying the full second price to the organizer. This would be double dipping and examiner is fairly certain that this is not applicant's intent.
